Chapter 1 by Story Wars

I thought that i could survive the sorrow and pain. Death by a broken heart was a fantasy, a romantic notion that somehow if we grieve, we would have the fate crying for us. I did believe in the possibility of moving on, of finding things or people that would free us from the burden of despair. I could have gone on with my life, turning a blind eye to everything greater about love and life had i not met her- or them i should say.

When my fated encounter with the couple had come to a pass, i had decided I would recount the story of their great love and loss whenever i felt capable myself. Until now i didn't think such a time would come but now that i have Sophia in my life, i should at least pen the story for her; tell her all the wonders i encountered in their existence because it certainly made me who i am today.
